INTRODUCTION

Literary work is an imaginary form of work. Literary works generally consist of prose, poetry, and drama. All three types have different forms. Poetry itself according to (Pradopo, 2012) defines poetry as a prediction of experiences that are interpreting (interpreting) in rhythmic (electrified) language (as the dramatization of experience in metrical language). Different from a short story or short story according to Suroto (Rahmah, 2016) a short story is a prose essay that contains the story of a human life event perpetrators / characters in the story. While the novel itself (Nur, 2015) is a type of literary work in the form of fictional stories created by the author by depicting real life scenes in a particular situation. The novel was created from the imagination of the author with the hope to be enjoyed and used by readers.
The form of drama has another definition, according to (Waluyo, 2002) the term drama is usually based on the area of discussion, namely drama scripts and stage plays.

On the other hand, opponents of that idea argue that literature is not suitable for a second language teaching context due to a number of reasons. First, although it contains authentic language, its vocabulary, genre, and register may not be relevant for students to learn, particularly those who are learning a second language for specific purposes. Second, with its rich language and complexity, students may find it too difficult to understand and, possibly, are short of confidence and strategies to draw any interpretations of the text (Lazar, 1993, p. 101). Indeed, adjustment can be made in the process of developing materials, for example, by shortening the text and replacing difficult words with more general ones. However, on the part of the teachers, this can be impractical and consumes too much of their time. The drama script itself is one of the literary works written in a dialogue benthic based on conflicts that have the possibility of being staged, whereas, drama shows according to Multon (Waluyo, 2002) as human life staged with action.

Literary appreciation can be done in two ways, namely appreciation in a direct way and appreciation in an indirect way. Direct appreciation is appreciation by writing literary works, while indirect appreciation is in the form of appreciation by displaying, reading, and studying literary works. In the study of literature, a person can use several methods in analyzing or studying one of them by examining the images used in a poem.

Imagery or often called wishful imagery is to provide a clear picture, to create an atmosphere, to make it more live and interesting, in poetry that poets often use. An image in mind, or a description of the poet. Every thought image is called an image or image. This thought image is an effect in the mind that closely resembles the image produced by our capture of an object that can be seen by the eye (sense of sight). The use of images in poetry is intended so that the reader can get a concrete picture of what the author or poet wishes to convey. Thus, the image element can help us interpret the meaning and live a poem as a whole.

Types of images are divided into 6 based on Abrams theory, namely: visual images, which are images caused by the sense of sight (eye). This image can provide a stimulus to the eye so as if you can see something that is not actually seen; auditory imagery, its image generated by the sense of the listener (ear). This image can provide a stimulus to the ear so as if it can hear something expressed through the image; tactile images, the images that involve the sense of touch (skin), for example rough, soft, smooth, wet, hot, cold, etc.; olfactory images, is the images that are related to the sense of smell (nose). Words that contain this image describe as if the object in question smells nice, rotten, rancid, etc.; Gustatory images, is the images that involve the sense of taste (tongue). Through this image as if we can feel something bitter, sour, sweet, sour, etc.; Kinesthetic imagery, is the imagery that does not concretely move, but abstractly the object moves. Poetry is a complex structure. Therefore, to be able to understand it as a whole must be analyzed. Therefore, the researcher will analyze one of the elements of poetry, which is the image or imagination in Chairil Anwar's poem with the title Imagery in Poet Siap Sedia by Chairil Anwar.

DISCUSSION

Below will be described the research findings found based on the analysis conducted on the poetry Siap Sedia by Chairil Anwar.
Siap Sedia
Tanganmu nanti tegang kaku,
Jantungmu nanti berdebar berhenti,
Tubuhmu nanti mengeras batu,
Tapi kami sederap mengganti,
Terus memahat ini tugu,

Matamu nanti kaca saja,
Mulutmu nanti habis bicara,
Darahmu nanti mengalir berhenti,
Tapi kami sederap mengganti,
Terus berdaya ke Masyarakat Jaya,

Suaramu nanti diam ditekan,
Namamu nanti terbang hilang,
Langkahmu nanti enggan kedepan,
Tapi kami sederap mengganti,
Bersatu maju, ke Kemenangan.

Darah kami panas selama,
Badan kami tertempa baja,
Jiwa kami gagah perkasa,
Kami akan mewarna diangkasa,
Kami pembawa ke bahagia nyata.
Kawan, kawan
Menepis segar angin terasa
Lalu menderu menyapu awan
Terus menembus surya cahaya
Memancar pancar ke penjuru segala
Riang menggelombang sawah dan hutan

Segala menyala-nyala!
Segala menyala-nyala!
Kawan-kawan
Dan kita bangkit dengan kesadaran
Mencucuk menerang hingga belulang.
Kawan-kawan
Kita mengayun pedang ke Dunia Terang.
